Board of Trustees.

The regular meeting of the Board of Trustees was held at the Town Hall last evening.

All members were present except Durrell.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The Finance Committee made their report and stated that hereafter there must be a different mode of computing the water used for street sprinkling. They recommended that the following bills be paid:

Alameda Water Co.	864 86
Berkeley Electric Light Co.	75 30
Guy Chick	13 30
John Squires	18 00
A. Cross	6 00
R. Lloyd	35 30
M. L. Hanscom	25 48
Gazette Pub. Co.	6 00
T. G. Brotherton	12 00
M. Colquhoun	2 00
J. A. Benning	48 40
G. Jones	46 97
M. A. Welch	52 55

Trustee Martin objected to the Electric Light Bill as the cost of wire and other work was far beyond the market price. He also thought that four days was pretty lengthy for putting up one electric light.

Trustee Rickard thought that more notice should be taken of electric light charges in the future than has been done in the past.

The report of the Finance Committee was adopted.

The Street Committee reported as follows:

That it would be advisable to allow the property owners on Fourth street to open the same by private contract. They also suggested that the opening of Prince street be held in abeyance until after Grove street is opened.

They also reported that many sewer contractors were in the habit of breaking sewer pipes in order to make connections instead of using the Y branches. They also recommended that a sanitary inspector be appointed to look after the plumbing of all new buildings. They also desired that contractors furnish samples of the rock they intend to pave streets with and that the same be reported upon by the Street Superintendent. That hereafter all corporations put down water and gas pipes on the streets before they are macadamized, and that property owners who have driveways over the gutters be prosecuted if said driveways cause an overflow.

The Electric Light Committee reported that the city was not being furnished with 2000 candle power lights; that the lights from all masts be removed and distributed about town and that lights be used upon a crane at street crossings; that wherever practicable arc lights be dispensed with and incandescent lights with reflectors be used.

Trustee Gage stated that he had quite a protest against the removal of the masts.

The report was received and placed on file.

The License Committee reported favorably upon the application and bonds of A. Blumberg to conduct a saloon and the license was granted.

The Health Officer asked that action upon the ordinance governing the rules of health be postponed until he could be present, he having been ill during the past week.

The President reported that East Berkeley was at the mercy of the fire fiend, as the hose there was rotten, six lengths having burst a few days ago.

On motion of Trustee Martin the Fire and Water Committee were instructed to purchase $490 worth of hose at the lowest market price.

The committee appointed to confer with the saloon men reported that the saloon men would not accept the $100 but would test the validity of the law in the courts.

Martin moved that the marshal arrest all saloon keepers who fail to pay him the license of $200.

The attorney advised that they tender the money to one man and then arrest him and make a test case of it. It was so ordered.

The President reported that he had counted the money in the hands of the treasurer and that he found $23,384.20 on hand. He also suggested that after the expert makes his report that all accounts be balanced and that a new start be made.

The President stated that the Committee on Railroads had come to the conclusion that it would be better to leave the track on the side on University avenue. The matter being put to a vote the Railroad Company was ordered to place the track in the middle of the street. Trustees Gage, Crutts, Martin and Hoff voting aye and Trustees Richards and Rickard voting no.

It was moved and seconded that the street superintendent employ seven persons to sprinkle the streets, one for each ward, at a rate of $3 per day for man and team and $3.50 per day for man, team and cart. Carried.

It was moved that all street sprinkling be done between 5 a. m. and 1 p. m., or eight hours work.

The town attorney announced that his office hours would be from 8 to 9 a. m. on Wednesdays and Saturdays at the office of the town treasurer. In the evenings he can be reached by telephone at his home.

The President was authorized to secure an office at East Berkeley for the town treasurer, at a cost not to exceed $7.50 per month.

The Special Committee reported a rate for the engineer's fees and the attorney was instructed to prepare an ordinance covering the same.

The President announced that in the future all bills against the town will have to be presented on the Wednesday preceding the next meeting.

Engineer Huggins reported that the cost of rolling down the streets of Lorin which have been disfigured by the laying of sewers would cost about $900. The report was referred back and he was asked to estimate the cost of all the streets in town which in his judgment needed repairing.

The street Superintendent was instructed to have the crosswalk at University avenue an Eighth street repaired. He was also instructed to put in a culvert at the corner of Russell and Derby streets.

The President announced that the town expert was experting the books to his entire satisfaction and that he would soon be ready to report to the Board.

The question of codifying the ordinances came up and after some discussion it was agreed that the codifier should receive $4 per day for his work and that the whole should not exceed $150.

Bids were opened for doing the town printing and the contract was awarded to the GAZETTE for one year.

President Rickard announced that Mr. Richardson was present and that he wanted to talk on the water question. He stated that the town could own its own water works at a cost of less than $200,000 and that the money could be raised by bonds. He asked for $500 to develop artesian water which, he says, exists in plenty underneath Berkeley. The Board decided to listen to his facts and figures this evening.

The President remarked that outside laundries only paid $.75 per quarter while the home laundry had to pay $12.10 per quarter. The matter was referred to the license committee.

Trustee Martin suggested that the Marshal find out from the Internal Revenue office who had licenses in Berkeley. Marshal Lloyd wanted to know whether the Board wanted to act as marshal; he had been elected to that office and understood his duties.

President Rickard asked for a leave of absence for 90 days which was granted. Trustee Richards was elected President pro tem.

Beacon Engine Company asked that a telephone be placed in the engine house so that water could be turned on to full pressure in case of fire. Referred to Fire and Water Committee.

Several ballots were taken for codifier but no choice was made at the house of adjournment, Mr. James and Mr. Preble both receiving three votes on each ballot. Mr. Martin not voting.

The Board then adjourned until this evening.

West Berkeley Kindergarten.

The "ghost" social at the kindergarten school rooms on University avenue and Eighth street, West Berkeley, was largely attended last evening and those who were fortunate enough to be there spent an evening very pleasantly indeed. There was a good program and it was carried out without the slightest jar. As each number was concluded the building was filled with applause that was well merited. The exercises, which entertained the audience, were as follows: First, a song, in which all assembled took part; second, reading by Miss Morris, a good elocutionist; third, prayer by the Rev. Mr. Hunter; fourth, a solo by Miss Maud Wilkes; fifth, reading by Miss Wilson; sixth, the "ghost" story by Miss Higgins; seventh, recitation by Miss Morris; and eighth a good-night song in which all joined. Light refreshments were served during the evening. When all departed for home it was with a light heart, which makes life worth living for.

The Flag Question.

In San Francisco yesterday the Executive Committee of the Fourth of July discussed the question nearly all the day as to whether the green flag of Ireland should be carried in the procession on the Nation's birthday. No decision was reached. Put it up and take down the American flag, also put up all foreign flags. Show no preference in that respect. Give all the flags a show except that of the United States, which would be out of place.

Respite for Teachers.

The Board of Education met last evening. It was decided to let the aged teachers teach a little longer in Oakland.

Director Clements, who originated the resolution, said that it had been stated that he introduced the resolution particularly to affect Principal McClesney of the high school. This, he said, he wanted to deny, as it was utterly without foundation. It was decided to postpone further consideration of the matter until the next regular meeting.

Music by the Blind Students.

The regular annual musicale by the students at the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and Blind took place last evening in the auditorium of the school. The entire programme consisting of sixteen numbers, was performed by blind pupils.

Among those who performed were Misses Fallon, Young, Scolberg, Oxton, Smith, Eastman, Nast, Foley and Labarage and Thomas Morrison.

AN ACCIDENTAL

Explosion at the Judson Powder Works

Causes the Death of two Men

And Painful Injuries to Another.

The Bodies of John Harbitz the Foreman, and Allen E. Butson Horribly Mangled.

Terrible Accident.

This morning at about 9 o'clock a plow that is used in the nitro-glycerine mixing house of the Judson Powder Works, situated on McKeever Hill, about two miles north of West Berkeley, was upon the track in front of the carpenter shop and was being repaired by the carpenter, Allen E. Butson.

Just a few minutes before the explosion occurred Superintendent Kennedy passed by and instructed the carpenter not to strike the plow with his hammer. Butson replied that he had washed it carefully and that there was no danger.

A few minutes later an explosion occurred and the foreman, John Harbitz, and the carpenter, Allen E. Butson lost their lives, and a teamster named Frank Koster was injured.

The cause of the accident was the striking of the plow which was covered with nitro-glycerine. Superintendent Kennedy heard the explosion and ran at once to the place where the carpenter had been working and there a scene of horror met his gaze.

The carpenter lay near the plow dead, with a portion of his head blown off and both of his eyes blown out, while just beyond him lay the foreman, John Harbitz, writhing with pain, both of his eyes having been blown out and being dismembered, besides having pieces of lumber run through his body. A little farther away lay Frank Koster with a lacerated scalp and an injured knee cap. The wounded men were removed to the office and a physician was sent for at once. The Coroner was also notified.

Harbitz was alive when Dr. Eastman arrived and was conscious but in terrible agony. Chloroform was administered, and he died three hours after he received his injuries.

There was only nominal damage done to the carpenter shop, the door being perforated in several places by flying portions of the plow. Part of the car on which the plow stood was shattered. None of the other buildings were injured.

As soon as the Coroner's deputy arrived he examined the bodies and removed them to Oakland. He took a watch from Butson's pocket, the case being dented and the crystal smashed. It had stopped at exactly ten minutes past nine.

John Harbitz, the foreman was a married man and resided at the corner of Sixth and Rose streets.

Allen Butson, the carpenter was single and lived at San Pablo.

Frank Koster resides in the west end, and as his injuries are slight he will soon be able to return to duty. The accident was entirely due to the carelessness of the carpenter, who after being cautioned to not strike the plow with a hammer did so and lost his life, as well as causing the death of the foreman.

The noise of the explosion was not heard one-half a block from the works and but very few people were aware of the accident.

The GAZETTE was soon informed and in a few minutes, in company with Connie Newell, one of our reporters was upon the scene of the accident.

The Coroner's inquest will be held this evening and then some further information may be obtained.

Blue and Gold Ahead.

URBANA, Ill., June 7.—The champion track team of the University of California entered its fourth dual meet at 3 o'clock at Champaign this afternoon, and at 5 o'clock had added another victory to its list, besides placing three new college records and one world's record upon its tablet. As its opponents, the University of Illinois, had held the Middle West championship, the California bear will henceforth be held in great honor among the Suckers, Hoosiers, Badgers and other Western people.

The day was bright and sunny and the trotting track was in fine condition. Scoggins, who has been steadily regaining his last year's condition, ran in faultless form in both sprints. He was matched against Bullard, who ran away from him at Chicago Saturday, and is certainly a very fast man, but today Scoggins turned the table. In the 100-yard dash both left the mark together, and kept pace to the 60-yard mark, where the Californian began to draw away, increasing the gap until it had widened into two yards at the finish.

There was much comparing of watches and the time was finally announced as 10 seconds.

The 220 yard dash was a beautiful race. The course was eight yards short, but still the time, 21 2-5 seconds, was very fast. Bullard, the second man, had run in 22 2-5 at Chicago.

Barnes easily won the quarter for California in 54 seconds. His time was caught thirty yards from home at 46 seconds, but he walked in, the head-breaking pace having overcome his opponents. Captain Koch led the half-mile procession by twenty-five yards. If he had been rushed another record would have been gone. Bradley secured a poor second in the mile. His feet are so blistered that he cannot be counted on. Merwin won the walk as he pleased in 7 minutes 50 seconds.

Torrey did not enter the 120 yards hurdle race. Woolsey fell at the first hurdle, so Dyer of California was left to fight it out with Captain Clark of Illinois and a more reliable man could not have been chosen. For the first five hurdles the men were even. Then Dyer gained the lead. The timers all agreed upon the time, 15 3-5 seconds.

The 220 yards hurdle race was a pretty contest, Torrey, Dyer and Captain Clark bunching together until the last fifty yards, where the Californian drew away. Torrey won from Dyer by five feet; time 25 1-5 seconds.

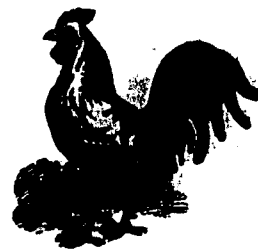

Kock secured second in the shot by 38 feet 5 1-5 inches. Dozier was second with 5 feet 7 inches in the high jump. The pole vault went by default to Illinois. Woolsey and Dozier took both places in the broad jump with 20 feet and Edgren won the hammer throw with 123 feet. Dozier's high jumping was very fine considering that his side run was up hill. Captain Clark, the winner, with a 6 feet record, only cleared 5 feet 8 inches.

Dozier, with his usual hard-luck, strained a tendon so that his broad jumping was done upon pure grit. Edgren's work was especially fine considering that he had been confined to his room for the past week with an attack of poisoning.

The score .55 to .43.

TOWN OFFICIAL PAPER.

SATURDAY, JUNE 8, 1895

MEN, both married and single, must take notice of the danger signal—the new woman has got one sleeve in town and as soon as there is room the other will follow, and then

There was a considerable excitement over the election of School Trustees in Benicia yesterday. A. Dalton, Sr., who has been a Trustee nearly one quarter of a century was re-elected. D. M. Hart was also re-elected.

VALLEJO has got ready for the reception of the Second Infantry Regiment which will leave Sacramento this morning on a boat provided for that purpose.

Police Inspector McLaughlin of New York City, the right hand man of Superintendent Byrnes recently forced to resign, has been found guilty of extortion.

In Virginia recently a couple were divorced who were well along in years. The bride was 72 and the groom 90 years of age. They had been married about three years but that was too long for them. The wife was granted alimony.

The Navy Department will soon receive bids for three torpedo boats. The plans are all complete. They will be about 180 tons burthen, 170 feet long and 17 feet broad. Their speed must be 26 knots per hour, and must not cost over $150,000 each. It is probable that more than one bid will be sent from the Pacific Coast. They will have triple-expansion engines and three boilers, giving 3200 horsepower.

WANTS REINSTATEMENT.

Commander John M. Quackenbush formerly, of the Navy, is having a hard time of it. He was court martialed and sentenced to be dismissed from the Navy but the President commuted his sentence to a suspension for six years. Before the expiration of this time an officer, below him in rank was promoted to his place and finally Secretary Chandler dropped his name from the list altogether. Of late Mr. Quackenbush endeavored to have Secretary Herbert mandamus to put his name on the roll. The Court says it has no jurisdiction. He can only get back through Congress and his name must be recommended by either the President or Secretary of the Navy.

FOURTH OF JULY.

There was a time in the history of the United States when the mention of this day sent a thrill of joy through the veins of every man, woman and child to the manner born. That thrill still pervades to a certain extent but it is necessary to have the right kind of blood for it to permeate through. Time has enlarged the distance through which patriotism must travel and the conductors have not kept pace with the times. When the current gets beyond a certain distance it begins to weaken, until before reaching the final point of its destination the pulsations cannot be felt. Consequently the outer portions of the patriotic body have become withered from inaction.

This is decidedly wrong. There should be renewed vigor injected into the whole system and the corpus once more be made to take in vitality.

The custom of a 4th of July parade seems to have been particularly striking to the foreign born population who have become citizens by name first and in some cases by nature afterward. With the idea of pomp they soon worked themselves into prominent positions on parade day. Of late years the general officers appointed for these celebrations have foreign names attached which are not familiar to the older Americans. As a rule one scarcely finds an American citizen of any length of descent taking part in the greatest day of the American nation. This is probably one of the greatest reasons for the decadence of patriotism on that day of our delivery from foreign bondage. It is quite possible that those who do take part in this day of devotion may be as strongly attached to the United States as those who have lived in the country through themselves and ancestors many years longer. Yet it can hardly be so, for the pulsations of the heart are strongest when nearest to the fountain head.

It is perfectly right and proper that the day should be honored forever and ever and at the same time by some means the patriotism of early days should be made sufficiently strong to make the effort an earnest one. The question arises how can this be done? Should the work be done by States generally and by the United States particularly? Or shall the work be divided still smaller so that on this never-to-be-forgotten day it shall have its celebration in every county seat of the nation. To arrive at this laws must be passed by governing bodies giving authority and making it mandatory to go through certain ceremonies that the remembrance of the birth of the nation may be more thoroughly impressed upon the minds of each generation as it comes forward to do its work on the wheel of time.

Let us have more real enthusiasm and earnestness as time rolls on and not so much weariness in the cause that gives us this great and glorious country and furnished the opportunity for every man, woman and child to develop according to ability.

The bartenders on the ferry-boats Piedmont, Oakland and El Capitan were arraigned in the Police Court yesterday on a charge of violating the license ordinance. The defendants pleaded not guilty. Their cases were set for trial on the 18th inst.

One time a bashful author said
He'd ask the maiden of his choice
If she— Just here his courage fled,
And quavers trembled in his voice.
Still once again he went to work
To indicate his longing rain
And said, "I fear I'm like a cork
That holds some jubilant champagne."
"Ah," laughed the maid with rosy hue,
As passion brought him to a stop,
"I understand you fully. You Must be drawn out before you'll pop."

ZETTE.

Upon the posters which hung on the outside of the carriage she was styled "Mlle. Antonia, Sonnambule Extralucide."

Her mother called her Zette—her real name was Suzanne.

She was a pretty girl, not very large, with fair complexion and long black hair that she let float about her during her consultations, though ordinarily she wore it in a loose coil upon the nape of a neck that was perfect.

Never having done much work, her hands were delicate and well shaped. She was enough of a coquette to wish to keep them so. She had a finely modeled form, and to have seen her simply dressed in some quiet color, with the gait of a wise little workwoman, one would never have suspected her strange calling.

Her mother, Mme. Flourey was as little like others of her class as her daughter. About her there was nothing in common with the shrews who frequent fairs in red dresses and soiled skirts. She had the air of a little merchant who was good and proper, with a winning, honest smile, and people stopped before the carriage and even entered there (without thinking of the charlatanism on the posters) in order to see the interior of this small dwelling that smelled so sweet.

The vehicle was painted brown, with a thread of gold running the lengths of the pilasters. There was a tiny balcony in front of it, and on this balcony convolvulus and nasturtium vines, planted in boxes, twined about wires up to the roof, where they clustered in bright hued bunches.

Along the route persons stared in amazement at this queer coach all covered with garlands of flowers.

The two women were always together, but associated very little with their neighbors. They were not proud, and having the best of hearts were the first to offer to care for a sick child or to give to others in distress. Indeed the foreigners who knew them well loved them sincerely, even though they did feel somewhat oppressed by what they termed "their grand manners."

There was, however, some one who was all devotion to Zette and her mother.

It was a young gymnast of two and twenty in a large traveling circus that had very nearly the same itinerary as Mme. Flourey. His name was Jacques, but on the playbills they spelled it Jack. He was exceedingly handsome and of no common type. There was fire in his eyes and much intelligence in his smile. There was, too, much tenderness in this same smile, especially when he spoke to Zette. His love for this pretty brunette—so unlike any other woman he had seen about him in his wandering life—was very sincere.

Near her he felt himself quite another man to what he was in the circus. There was such an atmosphere of honesty surrounding Zette that his own manners, when with her, were altogether different from what they had been, and he was astonished at how well they became him. Then, too, he had dreamed of being loved by this sweet girl and of never being separated from her. Their positions accorded admirably. His salary was good, and some day perhaps he might enter one of the great circuses of Lyons or Paris. It would be charming to find so sweet a little wife awaiting his coming after his work was done.

He had often spoken to Zette of these plans. He loved her so dearly that it could not be possible she did not love him at least a little.

Zette always listened silently, visibly touched by what she heard, and he thought each time she would say "Yes," but when he had finished by asking, with such pleading in his eyes, "Will you be my wife, Zette?" she replied very gravely, "No."

Then Jacques would be astonished. Why not? Could it be that she did not believe him when he said he loved her; that she had no confidence in him; that she did not love him?

"Yes, I love you," Zette answered sweetly, "but I do not wish to marry you."

And she would never say why. One day, however, Mme. Flourey blamed her for refusing the hand of this brave lad.

"Listen, mother," she said. "I adore Jacques, and I believe I shall always remain single because I do not wish to marry him. Do you remember the day when we went together to the circus? I saw as we entered how all the women who were there turned their longnettes toward him, and afterward they smiled and talked about him and tried to attract his attention by applauding him. I ought perhaps to have been proud to think that this man whom they all wanted loved me, and that I had only to say the word to be his wife. Ah, well, in my heart there was nothing but jealousy. I wanted to tear the longnettes away from those women. From what I suffered that evening I understood how much more I might suffer if we were married. No, that cannot be. He is too handsome. See? Suppose some day, when he had grown tired of me, one of those women should take him from me. I would die surely. You know now, mother, why I cannot say yes."

But notwithstanding this obstinate refusal, which he could not explain, Jacques came every day. He no longer mentioned the subject to Zette, understanding that he was contending against a fixed resolve, except once when he said to her: "You will not leave me, Zette, and I do not wish any other woman. Some day, though, you may change your mind, and then you need only hold out your hand and say to me, 'Let us be married, and it will make me happy.'"

So after thus simply settling the affair Jacques was like a brother in the house. It was he who in the springtime planted the seeds in the boxes upon the little balcony. It was he who twined the tendrils about the wires, and it was he who at all seasons furnished the gilded porcelain vases that held the flowers.
These flowers were a great luxury to Zette.

This state of things did not long continue, however. The young girl was now 20 and Jacques 26. One evening he presented his friends with tickets to the circus. It was the last day of a long continued fair, and Zette and her mother had nothing to do. So they decked themselves in their best and went early.

Mme. Flourey was much amused with the horses, the rope dancers, the clowns, the trained dogs. Zette thought only of Jacques, whose name on the programme occupied a line to itself, and whose apparatus was hanging up at the top of the high tent. The latter consisted of bars, with copper balls that shone, a maze of trapezes, ropes and pulleys, and the young girl, a little frightened, inquired if it all was secure.

At last the first part of the performance was over, and keeping time to a slow waltz Jacques appeared. He was as beautiful as a god in his silk tights, that displayed to advantage his superbly molded form, and, for the rest, his costume consisted of a black satin caloon, spangled with gold.

After having responded by a bow to the applause of the crowd and by a smile to Zette's smile, he darted up a rope to his trapeze.

The preliminaries were gone through with amid prolonged bravos, for the handsome gymnast was a favorite, and it was truly a pleasure to see him act—the supple body so pliant, yet so marvelously exact in its movements.

Then there came silence—even the orchestra was still.

It was to be the bit of the evening and a new feat that was to give an added glory to the circus. He was to leap from one trapeze to another, with his face and head covered, then suddenly drop from this giddy height upon a net stretched below him. The two trapeze were swinging with a regular movement.

Jacques, standing on a little board, his head enveloped in a black velvet bag, put forth his hand blindly. The crowd held its breath. The man was going to jump—he had jumped!

A piercing cry rent the air. Missing the second trapeze, which had been badly regulated, Jacques fell to the net, but it proved too frail to support his weight, and striking upon the seats he rolled to the ground, where he lay motionless.

With a cry of horror, Zette sprang to her feet, rigid and pale, her eyes fixed upon the spot where the men were now carrying away the apparently lifeless body of her friend.

Then suddenly seizing her mother's arm, "Come," she said in a hollow voice.

Breaking through the crowd, the two women reached the stables, but were refused admission. For a long while they remained at the entrance, listening to what was said around them, but no one knew anything. Finally Mme. Flourey saw a clown whom she recognized as one of Jacques' friends. He was just coming out of the refreshment room when she called him.

"The net broke the force of the fall," said the man, whose face looked troubled, even under the paint. "The doctor says he will be lame for life, and that this ends for him his profession as a gymnast. Poor fellow! But he has something laid up for a rainy day."

Mme. Flourey looked at Zette. She was very pale, and her eyes were fixed upon the man as he spoke as though trying to find if he lied. At last she said, "Let us go."

And thanking the clown by a gesture she left the circus.

The two women did not speak as they traversed the grounds of the fair, and they were still silent as they ascended their own little stairway. But when Mme. Flourey had lighted the candle she saw Zette sitting beside the bed, with a strange smile on her lips. She felt frightened for her and went to her.

"Of what are you thinking, little daughter?" she asked, trying to reassure herself.

Then Zette laid her head upon her mother's shoulder, with a childlike gesture.

"I think—that now I can marry Jacques," she told her.—From the French in Romance.

Their Trilby Club.

They were a party of gushing young girls.

"Oh, say," began the one in blue ribbons, "I've a splendid idea. Let's organize a Trilby club."

"Oh, yes," chimed in the others, "that would be delightful. How shall we manage?"

"Why," said the first speaker, "we'll all wear Trilby hats, and Trilby shoes, and Trilby gowns, and we'll sing Trilby songs and jabber French phrases along with our English, the way Trilby did, and—"

The prim girl at the edge of the group listened eagerly at first, but as the plan unfolded an expression of disgust and horror crept over her face. She could now contain herself no longer and interrupted with:

"Dress just like Trilby! Indeed I won't, and I'm astonished that any of you should propose such a thing. Is it possible that you are all ambitious to become living pictures?"—Buffalo Express.

She Knew Him.

"He will turn the tables on you if you are not careful," said one woman to another, who was berating her husband.

"Turn nothing!" she exclaimed. "He's so lazy he wouldn't turn a table if it was on rollers."—Detroit Free Press.

TWO HIGHWAYMEN,

I began at last to think that the ball would never come to an end. I had looked forward to it with absolute dread, for I was well aware of the plan which my uncle and Madam Trelawney had devised between them. I had already recognized that the lady's son was charming in his boyish frankness, but I had seen from the first that it was intended he should propose to me before the night was ended—this night of all nights in the year!—and I was resolved on my part that he should do nothing of the sort.

Truly, he was a gallant boy. I can fancy—for an old woman may surely tell her grandchildren she once was beautiful—that we made a pretty couple as we danced together. I know that madam treated me with quite unusual consideration, and once I caught her watching us with an altogether delightful air of satisfaction. Frank, too, did his dutiful best to offer me such attentions as are proper in a lover, and though I was resolved to thwart his mother and to keep him from courting rejection I could not but enjoy the little play in which I was acting. I pictured the surprise of all the good folks who were now watching me when the news of the morrow should reach them. And though I longed for the end of the ball, and the more serious adventure which was destined to follow, I found the situation vastly amusing.

Perhaps it was this fact which chiefly helped me to keep Frank at a distance.

"You are always laughing at a man,"
he said reproachfully during an interval between two dances, and upon my soul
I was hard put to find an answer. I could scarcely say that for him I had only pity, and yet this would have been the truth, even though I was well aware that his disappointment would be only for a week or two.

At any rate, when the hour of our departure had come, his devotion was still undeclared, and madam looked upon me a shade less kindly, I thought, when I went to take farewell of her. But, in truth, I was by this time too completely overcome by excitement to notice little details in the comportment of these people. They were all conspirators against my happiness and Dick's. I knew they would be checkmated within the hour, and already I could have laughed in their faces.

My uncle was a great gamester and never known to lose his coolness. On this night he had gained a large sum at cards. But, for all that, I fancy he had taken a goodly quantity of liquor during the evening. I noticed that his voice was a little thick. No sooner were we seated in his coach than he lay back in a corner and slept peacefully; soon he was snoring.

I was thus left alone. Indeed I could not have talked with him had it been otherwise, yet I now wished I were compelled to try, for the excitement I was in came near to being unendurable.
I could see nothing through the windows of the coach—nothing but the dim reflection of my own pale face against a background of utter darkness. Had I been able to take note of the landmarks as we passed them I might have been calmer. As it was, we had hardly been gone from the house five minutes when I began and continued to feel passionately assured that the very next moment would be productive of the event to which I looked forward so eagerly.

The drive appeared interminable. I began to think that Dick must have come early and grown tired of waiting, and I knew that if he did not keep trust my heart would simply break. And then, frightening me despite my eager anticipation of it, came the first sign.

I saw a sudden blackness move past the window. A pistol cracked, and as the carriage ceased to move I heard a man's voice speaking sternly to the coachman and his companion on the box. It struck me the sternness was singularly well acted, for the coachman had been in the plot from the first. He happened to have a fancy for my maid, Genevieve, and Dick's bribe was a superfluity once she had undertaken to make sure of him.

My uncle stirred in his corner, muttering incoherently—but he was still more than half asleep when the door of the coach was opened, and a tall, graceful figure—how well I knew it, having met him frequently at dusk on the edge of the old plantation!—stood dimly outlined against the darkness. The newcomer was masked and put a pistol to my uncle's head.

"You ride late, sir," he said. And I wondered at the skill with which he disguised his voice. "I presume you carry firearms and must ask that you will trust them to my keeping."

I can hardly report my uncle's words.
Indeed they were not coherent, so great was his indignation, but he gave up his pistols, and the highwayman straightway flung them far into the darkness.

"Your purse," he continued politely.
Then, when he had received this also:
"Sir Richard Courtney's ink at the cards has passed into a proverb. Tell your friends, sir, that you have given their I. O. U.'s to one who will never ask for payment, for I have no doubt I shall find them here."

He put the purse into his pocket.
"There is a diamond ring, too," he said,
"and a watch." And these things he also received and pocketed.

All this time my uncle had been cursing for a thief and swearing he would see him hanged within a month upon the highest point of the moorland.
As for me, I had enjoyed the proceedings to begin with, but now I began to be afraid. Previous time was being
